

GRADE 8 ELA UPDATE

"Today a reader; tomorrow a leader." - Margaret Fuller

December 2016

DECEMBER'S CLASSROOM FOCUS

Our ELA classrooms will be looking at modern works of fiction to determine how they draw upon universal themes, patterns of events, and character types from myths, traditional stories, or religious works. Ultimately, students will explain how a contemporary piece of literature was "rendered new" by the author. After studying this concept, students will be asked to apply this learning to a piece of text and explain the connection to other texts along with universal ideas in literature.

Students will also be revising and editing their work with narrative writing. Since October, students have been experimenting with a variety of writing techniques. They learned how to write engaging leads, how to develop dynamic characters, and how to engage a reader by using descriptive details and sensory language to capture the action and convey experiences. Now our own 8th grade authors will take their selected stories through all stages of the writing process.

EXTENDING THE LEARNING AT HOME

Many students are unaware of how modern day entertainment is based upon ideas that come from universal themes or replicate the same ideas from a past time. For instance, The Odd Couple, an original show from the 1970's, has been resurrected to reflect modern times. Full House is trying to capitalize on its fame from the 1980's, adding a modern day twist. Films such as Star Wars and Lord of the Rings, clearly draw upon the idea of good vs evil and the Hero's Journey. Talking about these common points we see in literature, entertainment, and even video games, gives us an opportunity to have conversations with our children about how these ideas play out in our own society. And isn't every parent looking for ways to connect with his or her children?
